Iran commander calls US military in Gulf a target not a threat: ISNA

U.S. forces have been sent to the Middle East to counter "clear indications" of threats.

A senior Iranian Revolutionary Guards commander said on Sunday the U.S. military presence in the Gulf used to be a serious threat but now represented a target, the Iranian Students' News Agency (ISNA) reported.

The U.S. military has sent forces, including an aircraft carrier and B-52 bombers, to the Middle East in a move U.S. officials said was to counter "clear indications" of threats from Iran to its forces in the region.

The U.S.S. Abraham Lincoln is replacing another carrier rotated out of the Gulf last month.

"An aircraft carrier that has at least 40 to 50 planes on it and 6,000 forces gathered within it was a serious threat for us in the past but now it is a target and the threats have switched to opportunities," said Amirali Hajizadeh, head of the Guards' aerospace division.

"If [the Americans] make a move, we will hit them in the head," he added, according to ISNA.

Iranian navy commander Rear Admiral Hossein Khanzadi said on Sunday that American forces must exit, according to ISNA. "The presence of the Americans in the Persian Gulf region

"An aircraft carrier that has at least 40 to 50 planes on it and 6,000 forces gathered within it was a serious threat for us in the past but now it is a target and the threats have switched to opportunities."

Amirali Hajizadeh, head of the Revolutionary Guards' aerospace division has reached its end and they must leave the region," Khanzadi said. Major General Hossein Salami, appointed head of the Guards last month, told parliament on Sunday the United States had started a psychological war in the region, the parliamentary spokesman said.

"Commander Salami, with attention to the situation in the region, presented an analysis that the Americans have started a psychological war because the comings and goings of their military is a normal matter," spokesman Behrouz Nemati said, according to parliament's ICANA news site.

Iran's Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif said in a tweet on Sunday that John Bolton had planned the U.S. withdrawal from a 2015 nuclear deal and a more aggressive approach even before the U.S. national security adviser took up his post.

Zarif tweeted a link to a 2017 National Review article by Bolton headlined "How to Get Out of the Iran Nuclear Deal."

"A detailed blueprint for #FakeIntelligence, #ForeverWar and even empty offers for talks-only phone numbers were not included," Zarif wrote.

CNN reported on Friday that the White House had passed a telephone number to the Swiss for contacting U.S. President Donald Trump in case Iranian officials wanted to hold talks.

Pilot lands plane on nose after landing gear failure

2 A Myanmar pilot safely landed a passenger jet without its front wheels on Sunday, after landing gear on the Myanmar National Airlines plane failed to deploy, the airline and an official said. It was the second aviation incident in Myanmar this week, after a Biman Bangladesh Airlines plane skidded off the runway during strong wind in Yangon on Wednesday, injuring at least 17 of those onboard. An official praised the pilot for bringing the Embraer 190 aircraft in to land at Mandalay airport on Sunday morning despite the technical failure. No one was hurt. Myanmar National Airlines, the state-run carrier, said in a statement the aircraft had departed from the city of Yangon and was approaching the airport serving the central city of Mandalay when the pilot was unable to extend the front landing gear. Conn. man faces 140 years in prison for Trump threat

3 A Connecticut man has been indicted after prosecutors say he threatened to kill President Donald Trump and sent others bomb threats and mail containing suspicious white powder, according to court documents. Gary Gravelle, 51, was indicted on 16 counts, including that he threatened the president in September 2018 by sending an envelope containing white powder and the handwritten message "You Die." He sent similar envelopes to a synagogue, a mosque and a chapter of the NAACP, according to the indictment. The note claimed the powder was a biotoxin but it was found to be harmless, officials said. Gravelle also sent emails and made phone calls threatening to detonate bombs in Vermont, Washington and at various locations in Connecticut, including government buildings and a mental health facility. Gunmen kill 6 in 2nd church attack in Burkina Faso

4 Gunmen killed six people including a priest outside a Catholic church in Burkina Faso on Sunday, the government said, the second attack on Christians in two weeks in a nation increasingly overrun by jihadists. Congregants were leaving church around 9 a.m. in the town of Dablo in the Central North region when about 20 men encircled them and shot six dead, according to a government statement and local sources. The attackers then burned the church, looted a pharmacy and some others stores, and left, Dablo Mayor Boucary Zongo told Reuters. The government statement only mentioned the burning of a shop and two vehicles. "These terrorist groups are now attacking religion with the macabre aim of dividing us," it said. The government declared a state of emergency in several northern provinces bordering Mali in December because of deadly Islamist attacks. REUTERS

State considers new road fees, commissions yet another traffic study

According to some lawmakers, drivers are actually open to a hike.

DAN ATKINSON

but noted that proposals will take a year to produce.

The request appears to be a second incarnation of a similar state contract that the Texas-based Jacobs Engineering Group received in 2016, though a MassDOT spokesman said Jacobs was limited to producing reports related to revenue forecasts and rates during the 2016 transition away from toll booths. Meanwhile, on the traffic front, MassDOT's planning department is currently studying congestion statewide. A study released earlier this year by the transportation analytics firm INRIX found Boston to have the worst rush-hour traffic in the U.S. in 2018.

Though Gov. Charlie Baker has pushed back on new tolls, other Beacon Hill leaders are open to a jump. State Senate President Karen Spilka said last month she would consider the idea of border tolls, while Speaker of the House Robert DeLeo said that all tax hikes are on the table.

Chris Dempsey, director of the advocacy group Transportation for Massachusetts, agreed that political attitudes are shifting in favor of more road taxes, and said plans like adding tolls to I-93 and the Tip O'Neill Tunnel would more fairly tax drivers heading north and south as opposed to only east-west travelers who pay tolls on I-90.

"You've got political leaders hearing loud and clear from the public that the status quo is not working," Dempsey said. "We absolutely have to ask the question, is the system fair and are there ways to make it more fair and have people chip in, whatever road they're driving on? We're falling behind on maintenance for the Tip O'Neill Tunnel because we're not generating the revenue to cover costs."

This article was produced in collaboration with the Boston Institute for Nonprofit Journalism. To support independent local reporting, visit givetobinj.org.

As state officials re-up a $1.5 million contract to study new tolls, legislators and transportation advocates say the mood has changed on Beacon Hill toward adding new road fees in order to reduce congestion and pay for infrastructure needs.

According to some lawmakers, drivers are actually open to a hike.

"There's absolutely been a shift," said state Sen. Joseph Boncore (D-Boston), chair of the Senate Transportation Committee. "There's a lot of polling data that suggests people don't mind paying user fees if the benefit is better roads and less congestion."

MassDOT is looking for consultants to study traffic and revenue throughout the state over three years for a fee of $500,000 a year, according to a bid solicitation released this month. The tolls on the Mass Pike, the airport tunnels, and the Tobin Bridge currently bring in more than $375 million a year, and the study asks consultants to look at not just pricing changes but new toll opportunities altogether.

"Assist MassDOT with feasibility studies, opinions, and recommendations on [traffic and revenue] and other impacts from toll policy and pricing changes as well as potential toll expansions, such as border tolls, HOT or managed lanes, Truck Only Tolling, Vehicle Miles Travelled, etc.," the bid reads, also mentioning congestion and time-of-day pricing.

HOT, or high-occupancy traffic lanes, let single drivers use a carpool lane in exchange for paying a toll, while a Vehicle Miles Traveled program would tax cars through a transponder based on the amount of road they traverse. Boncore said the Senate's working group on road issues will take a "good hard look" at VMT,

Michael Torpey talks another season of 'Paid Off' and the politics around student debt

The second season of "Paid Off With Michael Torpey" premieres tonight on TruTV.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

When we caught up with Michael Torpey before the premiere of the first season of his show "Paid Off With Michael Torpey" on TruTV last year, the show seemed like it was an idea just crazy enough to work. Since then, the groundbreaking game show has helped numerous contestants decrease or completely eradicate their student debt, and struck a chord with an American audience desperate for a solution to the current crisis we are living through. After getting such a positive response, the show will be returning tonight to help even more people each night: In addition to helping contestants in the studio, Torpey will also be taking live calls from those in need around the country. We caught up with Michael Torpey ahead of the premiere about the new season and what he thinks politicians should be discussing ahead of the 2020 election.

Your show "Paid Off" is coming back for its second season. What do you attribute to the show's success?

I think it is tapping into a cause that a lot of people believe in and are waking up to. The hope was that it would be presented in a way that didn't feel political — no, sorry, not political, not partisan. You know, traditionally it feels like it's been a cause of the left. But I really wanted to present human stories and say, look at these people who are doing their absolute best and they're just getting screwed over by our higher education system. And I think people were really able to get behind that and realize that there's something wrong, that we are penalizing people for just wanting an education. When we're holding people back from doing work that we look around our community and see that we need to have done, then there's something really wrong here. So it was great to have support from viewers, and also to have people reach out and say, you know, that they want to come on. It's crazy that this is someone's best course of action but unfortunately that's where we are right now.

It seems like both student debt relief or free public college are both issues that the majority of people can get behind — like the legalization of marijuana — but the government is slow to implement on a wide scale. What do you think is the best course of action for people to make changes on the political level?

Sure. Well, you brought up of the legalization of marijuana. I think that's a good parallel between the two, because of the student debt crisis and mass incarceration for drug charges. They're both results of poor government policy. When people say, hey, you've done this wrong for years, we just need you to fix it — I think that's completely appropriate. People want to paint it as this government giveaway that comes out of nowhere. That's wrong. The government has been involved in student debt for years. It's become a huge problem, and for them to fix it, it's not out of left field, it's completely appropriate. I think the same goes for our failed drug policies.

If we're going to legalize marijuana, we have to step in, and we have to do right by all the people whom we have penalized with insane jail terms for possession and minor marijuana offenses. I want people to call the representatives. It's what I say at the end of every show. I want them to do it. We should be flooding their phone lines — that works. Ask anyone who works at an office. Ask anyone who works in one of the offices of one of our elected officials. It's the people who call their office, those are the messages that get relayed. You know, writing letters is great, too, but put that number in your phone. Make it a part of your walk to work. Just call them up and say, "Hey, it's Michael. I need you to get behind [Sen. Elizabeth] Warren's plan for debt forgiveness. That I think is the best thing we can do, because our elected officials need to know how we feel about this. Even if it's someone who you know doesn't care, who vehemently does not agree, call their office every day and tell them you're going to find someone who does.

What do you think is the best strategy for debt forgiveness?

Bernie hasn't put out a new plan in a while. I feel like we're going to hear something new from him soon, so I don't necessarily want to say that I'm choosing someone over another. But I will say that I like that Sen. Warren's plan addresses the outstanding debt and the cause of it. Because if you just come in and forgive all this debt but you just ignore the current higher education system, what about next year? What about all of their debt? You've got to address the root of it, too, and she wants to have more funding for public education so that it can be free as well. And I think that needs to happen. In terms of cost, these are things that we decide to pay for as a society, and I would happily pay more for a more educated, better-functioning society, and a happier society. It would be something that I would happily sacrifice more of my income toward. And money is always an excuse for something that people don't want to do. I feel like we can always find funding when needed.

Have you been contacted by any politicians for advice?

I have not, no. I want to reach out to some to see if they'll come hang out, to come and see if they'll be part of the show, but I have not been directly contacted by anyone. I wonder if it's because the show is so weird, because I point the finger at Congress a lot. I wonder if they just want to stay a little distant, because, I mean, the show's a little out there and some people don't like it. Maybe it's just a little too risky for a politician to associate themselves with. I would welcome anyone who would want to come on the show and talk. The show is supposed to welcome conversation, so if you want to come from any side of this conversation and come be part of the show, I am here for it. Because the goal is that by telling all the stories, at the very least we'll know that something needs to change.

Hearing people tell their stories of their struggles with student debt must take a toll on you. How are you feeling going into the second season?

It's devastating to hear the sacrifices people are making for going to school, but it's inspiring to hear that they're still looking to make a change and they have these frames [of mind] and they have work that they want to do. And the few people whom we've really been able to help out, it pushes the group for it as a whole. So when you see the small effect of this little game show, and how many lives we have changed already, and you think, man, if we can cancel out debt for Warren's plan, I think 75 percent of the debtholders would be debt-free immediately? So that's over 30 million? So 30 million people [would be] immediately unburdened? The impact that would have, you know, within this [show] on the scale of 40 people a year. And most of these people aren't fully unburdened: We only have a couple of grand-prize winners each season, so it's really only eight a year who are completely unburdened of their debt. And to see that, that is so powerful, for someone to be able to say that they can go do what they worked toward their whole life. If that were to happen on a mass scale, in one fell swoop, for 30 million people? It would be one of the most invigorating moments in this country's history.

'With "The Avengers," we did something extraordinary'

Scarlett Johansson

The American actress chatted with Metro about the path of "The Avengers" and her experiences during filming. GABRIELA ACOSTA SILVA, MWN

Scarlett Johansson, who plays Natasha Romanoff/Black Widow in "Avengers: Endgame," talked with Metro.

Would you like the "Avengers" story to continue?

I will avoid spoilers out of respect for people, but surely there will be some surprises.

Eleven years have passed since the first film.

How much did it mark you personally and professionally?

We recently recalled that it was on May 2, 2008, when the "Iron Man" movie was released. It has started the Marvel film universe, which in total has added six films. It contrasts and strength. But above all, to show a sensitive female role in a world dominated by men. On a professional level, it gave me a lot of learning, discipline and physical condition [laughs].

It is a much more human story that could cause tears.

We all got involved in every way and were absorbed by the story. It has been a trip for us and the fans. I laughed, I cried and I experienced all the emotions as an actress and a spectator. In addition, in this new release, women gain relevance not to compete, but to reach a gender equity in history.

who likes to maintain balance?

Black Widow was always a stabilizing force. I think Natasha Romanoff is a little different from the average superhero, because she has a different moral compass. She understands that there is a balance between light and darkness in the world and that one must make a sacrifice at both ends to maintain a certain balance. She can be very cold, but she has a big heart. There has always been a mystery surrounding Black Widow, because you can never know exactly which side she is on.

Do you already miss that side of Natasha?

last 10 years was very rewarding. Being able to return again and again to it and be part of Marvel's cinematic universe during the last few years was an incredible opportunity. Therefore, in many aspects it is a reflection of myself and reflects my own growth and my own challenges. I think it was an incredible gift as an actress to have lived that experience. And I feel we did something extraordinary with this movie.

Will you miss "The Avengers"?

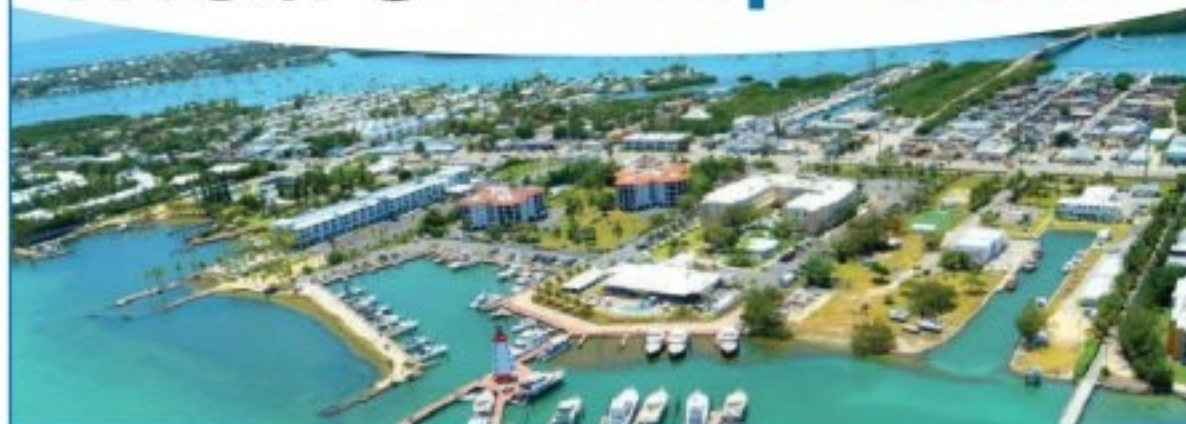

We have lived so many changes in the last 10 years in our careers and in our personal lives. The "Avengers" movies were always like coming home on vacation, reuniting with your family and taking back the things where we had left them. We all have such a close relationship because we have spent so much time and experienced so many things together. And that dynamic is really projected in the movies in many ways.

"We have all grown and lived this wonderful experience together. We have started a family, we have married or divorced."

Bruins outclass Hurricanes once again

The B's spanked Carolina, 6-2, on Sunday.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

The familiar chant of "We want the Cup!" rained down onto the TD Garden ice following the Bruins' fourth and fifth goals of the day on Sunday afternoon.

Boston fans may very well get their wish in the end, as the Bruins certainly have that familiar look of a team that will raise that gorgeous silver trophy come June.

The B's turned in their most dominant performance of the playoffs thus far on Mother's Day in Boston, waxing the Hurricanes, 6-2, to take a 2-0 series lead.

Game 3 is Tuesday in Raleigh, North Carolina (8 p.m., NBCSN).

We're only two games in, but thus far in the best-of-seven clash Carolina has simply looked outclassed. The Bruins put up five goals in a rather comfortable Game 1 victory at the Garden last Thursday, and Game 2 was an absolute blood-bath.

A tremendous sign for the Bruins is that they are winning and not even having to rely on their big offensive guns like Brad Marchand and David Pastrnak. Here are the Bruins players who have registered goals through two games in the Eastern Conference Final: David Backes, Jake DeBrusk, Danton Heinen, Connor Clifton, Matt Grzelcyk, Steven Kampfer, Marcus Johansson, Patrice Bergeron, Charlie Coyle and Chris Wagner.

The 2-2-2 plan

Hurricanes goaltender Petr Mrazek was strong for the first 15 minutes of the game on Sunday. Then the roof caved in.

Thanks to a great forecheck by the Bruins, Grzelcyk was able to trickle the puck past

The goal gave the Bruins clear momentum, as they broke through again just six seconds into a power play to close out the first period. DeBrusk showed tremendous patience in front of the net, shuffling it past Mrazek on his third opportunity.

Those two goals in the first period were followed up by two goals from the B's in the second, and two more in the third as Boston provided consistent pressure.

Clifton took advantage of Mrazek's aggressiveness in the second period, catching the Carolina netminder out of position on the Bruins' third goal of the night, and Grzelcyk beat Mrazek with a beauty of a backhand off a bouncing puck to lift the B's to a 4-0 lead. Backes and Heinen tallied the two late goals for the B's.

Justin Williams and Teuvo Teravainen scored for the Canes late in the third period with the game well decided.

Rask rules

One would guess that those two late goals that Rask let in won't bother him a bit in Game 3. The Bruins netminder has been the star of the playoffs thus far, continually coming up huge. He made 21 saves on Sunday, highlighted by a play in the second period during a Carolina power play.

Never flinching when the Hurricanes were on the man-advantage, Rask gloved the puck after it had bounced off of Brandon Carlo's skate just three feet in front of the net.

As for Mrazek, the Bruins may not even have the pleasure of seeing him on Tuesday night.

The Hurricanes have a capable backup in 35-year-old Curtis McElhinney as the journeyman started and won two games in Carolina's series win over the Islanders in the semifinals. McElhinney actually started for the Canes against the Bruins back in March as well, allowing four goals in a 4-3 overtime loss at the Garden.

David Backes levels Lucas Wallmark on Sunday at TD Garden.

Ballpark dynamics key in baseball bets

VSIN

In recent weeks, VSIN has talked about key stats for evaluating offenses (team on-base percentage) and starting pitchers (innings pitched per start, K-Rates and home run rates at the expense of often-misleading earned run averages). Today, we're going to zoom back a bit and talk about the big-picture impact of ballpark effects.

It's very important that handicappers realize the effect that ballparks have on run production. Oddsmakers and sharps know! Whenever casual bettors are thinking that an Over/Under is too high or too low, it's often because they haven't taken ballpark influences into account.

How can you find this kind of information? Easy! A simple web search for ESPN's ballpark factors will bring you to a chart that shows what's been happening this season for all 30 Major League stadiums. Of course, that's still a fairly small sample size. It's best to look back over multiple seasons for better perspective.

The problem with that approach right now is that there's very strong evidence a change in baseball construction is causing fly balls to soar further than in 2018. It's not technically right to call them "juiced balls" because they haven't been injected with anything. But, they're more aerodynamically friendly to distance.

We saw the same thing two seasons ago, in 2017. For now, it's probably best to combine early 2019 ballpark data with 2017 ballpark data (using the "pulldown" on ESPN's web page), throwing out 2018.

JD Martinez has taken advantage of Fenway Park's dimensions.

GETTY IMAGES

Why do it that way? Because home runs are playing an important role in determining daily side and total results. Winning bettors need to know which ballparks are most likely to see long fly balls soar over the fence — and which can still keep them in the park because of dimensions or weather dynamics.

Have you been doing that in your handicapping? Or are you locked in to an old way of doing things, hoping to latch onto streaks or assuming ERA is all you need to know to evaluate a pitcher? This week, think about studying baseball from the following perspective:

"Look at the home run skills of each offense (making sure to note when long ball hitters are out of the lineup because of injuries or rest).

"Look at the home run prevention skill sets of each starting pitcher (stats are easy to find at fangraphs.

com or any other in-depth website).

"Look at the home run characteristics of bullpens (particularly if mediocre long relievers are likely to see action because the starter won't go more than 4-5 innings.

"Look at the home run characteristics of each game's ballpark.

VSIN trusts you'll know what to do if you find a slugging offense facing fly ball pitchers in a great home run park. Or if you find an anemic offense facing a home run-averse pitcher in tough scoring conditions.

You don't need a degree in physics to pick baseball winners. But you do need a better awareness of what's causing wins and losses in current conditions. Ignore park effects and your bankroll will be going, going, gone.

Be sure to watch VSIN's "Follow the Money With Mitch and Pauly" on NESN weekdays at 10 a.m.

Aries Live and learn. Participate in activities and events that will help you become more aware of your health, attributes and long-term goals. Productivity and romance will enhance your life.

Taurus Ask questions and find out where you stand and who supports your ideas and plans. A heart-to-heart talk will motivate you to start your journey into the unknown.

Gemini Trying to change others is futile. If you want to make your life better, look inward and consider how to use your skills and resources to be the best you can be.

Cancer Stay focused on how to most effectively make a difference. Stay positive at all times. Your attitude and treatment of others will bring good results. Home improvements are favored.

Leo Don't let what others do or say get to you. Listen, assess your situation and do whatever is in your best interest. Physical improvements and romance are highlighted.

Virgo Just keep putting one foot in front of the other. The possibilities are endless, once you get started. Network with peers and express your thoughts and feelings to make things happen.

Libra Learn from your experience. If you face turmoil or a disgruntled or demanding individual, retreat and do something geared toward self-improvement and a healthier lifestyle.

Scorpio Reach out to people who share your beliefs and concerns. If you collaborate with someone, you'll come up with solutions to problems that have been slowing you down. A proposal should be looked at carefully.

Sagittarius Deal with partnerships head-on. If you are evasive or fail to ask direct questions, little will be accomplished. Physical activity will do you good. A romantic gesture will improve an important relationship.

Capricorn Keep your distance if someone tries to pry into your personal affairs. Concentrate on your assets and home environment, and keep things running smoothly.

Aquarius Keep busy. Physical activity, helping others and personal improvements will be satisfying and will help you avoid getting stuck taking care of someone else's responsibilities.

Pisces Make plans and execute them strategically. Don't leave room for error or let anyone interfere. Walk away from excessive individuals or anyone who is emotionally manipulative. EUGENIA LAST
